Choking

When something as simple as silence becomes dangerous, there is a problem.
Words used as weapons are shoved deep down in my throat where I cannot take a breath. I cannot make a sound.
Oxygen depletes quickly as I gasp for air; lungs burning like the hatred in your eyes as I spoke my truth with pride and dignity.
Conformity is not in my anatomy.
Blood runs as cold as the shoulder you give me as my body starts to shake, trembling profusely, as I wrap my hands around my neck.
There's no one here
to hit my back:
while the social and political constructs obstruct my airways leaving me nearly dead.
As I choke on the ideas being shoved upon me,
I desperately
try to hold on to my Identity.
