Whatever lies in his hair and head is unknown
You wouldn't know what was stewing in there
If it weren't for his face
A mixture of concentration, misery, and thankfulness are all painted on his face
The classical music erupts!
Adding life to his very gentle limbs
Oh if anyone could see what I see Each hand movement resembling a brush stroke
Doesn't matter if its right or wrong
The paint is still there
Tapping his foot waiting for his mark
He allows himself to read ahead
Even from afar, you can tell he's nervous
Maybe I'm being too harsh
This is the song of our present
This song is the leaves that are falling off the trees outside
The ending to a sad movie It's what plays in my head when I'm afraid of something that's meant to be
This song is the love in his eyes when he looks at me It's the sound of him pushing his way through life knowing what's around the corner and not caring
