It took hiding away from the world to see what had always been in front of us.

We were never going to be younger or more beautiful or more alive than in those moments.

We were so in love with life, and the world and each other.

Yet

We took all of it for granted. Every sunset, every drive, every dance, every touch.

All of these moments slipped by, unrecognized until we didn't have them anymore.

That is the good to come from all of this.

These moments are no longer unappreciated.

How can they be? When they're the only thing that matters.

We are living the good ol' days, and they will be cherished.
